Undergraduate Research Assistant Position

Personality and Well-Being Lab | Virtual | 3-9 Hours per week (3 hrs/cr.)

Are you curious about how personality and well-being change in adulthood and what might cause those changes? Ever wonder which sort of factors influence when or how much personality and well-being change for certain people? How do we meaningfully assess personality and well-being? Our research team (Drs. Richard Lucas and Brent Donnellan and graduate student Andrew Rakhshani) aims to address these and related questions across several active projects using a variety of methodologies. Selected undergraduate research assistants will have opportunities to help in and learn about the design of studies, collection and analysis of data, and reporting and discussion of findings. At our regular lab meetings, we work together on current projects and discuss interesting research within the field of personality science.

We are looking for underclassman volunteers that can commit to the lab for at least two consecutive semesters (preference to those able to commit at least 6 hours per week). Interested applicants should email Andrew Rakhshani (rakhsha2@msu.edu). Please include your CV/resume and unofficial transcript.
